Parakeets are found in the wild in parts of Australia, Asia, and Central America, where they typically live in large flocks. In the wild, they prefer to inhabit forests, woodlands, and grasslands. They are highly social birds, often seen in groups, and enjoy interacting with each other.

Parakeets are usually green, but they can also come in a variety of bright colours, including yellow, blue, and even white. Their small bodies are slender, with long tails and sharp, curved beaks. Parakeets have a unique characteristic of having two toes pointing forward and two pointing backwards, which helps them grip branches and hold onto food with ease. They have a distinctive head shape with a small beak and large, round eyes.

Parakeets are herbivores, primarily feeding on seeds, fruits, and flowers. They have strong beaks that help them crack open seeds and enjoy a variety of plant-based foods. They may also consume small amounts of insects. The average lifespan of a parakeet in captivity is 5 to 10 years.

Parakeets are known for their lively chirping and can be quite vocal, making a variety of sounds to communicate with others. They are excellent fliers and can travel long distances in search of food and water. Parakeets are known for their intelligence and can be trained to do tricks or even mimic human speech. They are very playful and enjoy activities like swinging, climbing, and flying.
